97 Falkenturm Boutique Hotel Munich

Despite the name, you wouldn't really call it the Falkenturm boutique. It is, however, a small, stylish hotel that punches above its two-star weight thanks to modern rooms with scarlet design accents. Set in a side street, it's also well located for central Munich sights, including the Bayerisches Nationaltheater and the Kunsthalle München museum.

Details B&B doubles cost from £84 (00 49 892 3239 590, hotel-falkenturm.de)

98 Guesthouse Enzianhof Oberammergau

Germany's Oberammergau is known for its once-a-decade passion plays, first performed in 1634. While tourists flock to see the performances (the next one is in 2020), there are plenty of other reasons to visit, owing to its beautiful location in the Bavarian Alps. This cosy chalet hotel has a typically chocolate-box façade, woody mountain-style rooms and a spa.

Details B&B doubles cost from £72 (00 49 882 2215, enzianhof.de). Fly to Innsbruck, Austria

99 Hotel Schani Vienna

Across the street from Vienna central railway station, the Schani is the kind of place that wouldn't look out of place in Shoreditch, east London. Housed in a former 1929 Viennese inn, it has urban-chic decor and colourful rooms, where doors open with the touch of your smartphone. The epicentre of the hotel is the "co-working" lobby that acts as a café-cum-office, gathering all manner of creatives to collaborate.

Details B&B doubles cost from £82. (00 43 195 5071 5, hotelschani.com)

80 Nala Innsbruck

Taking over a traditional 1950s hotel two years ago, the Nala adds a touch of contemporary cool to the Innsbruck hotel scene. Rooms have different styles, from bijou "business" offerings to family suites with balconies and mountain views. There's also a hip bar and restaurant, and a small gym.

Details Room-only doubles cost from £85 (00 43 512 584 444, nala-hotel.at)

81 National Bern

Built in 1908 and with a beautifully ornate original lift that has become a tourist sight, there's a lot going on at the National, in Switzerland's capital. There is an elegant restaurant, a dining terrace across the street, a wonderful theatre and a nightclub, which all make for a buzzy atmosphere. Rooms are bright and have wooden floors; some are decorated with pop art.

82 Sun Gardens Dubrovnik

Everyone wants to stay in Dubrovnik's evocative old town, which is why getting a decent room there for less than £100 can often mean visiting on a wet Tuesday in February. Eschew the ancient walls for this cliffside resort a few miles from town, with its gorgeous views of the Adriatic, airy rooms, three restaurants and access to a beach.

Details B&B doubles start from £93 (00 385 20 361 500, dubrovniksungardens.com)

83 Hotel Jagerhorn Zagreb

The Jagerhorn is a recently renovated hotel that sits in a passageway that links Zagreb's upper and lower towns. There are 18 rooms with royal blue fabrics and upcycled furniture, as well as a popular café. You can walk from the bottom of town to the top via the passageway if you wish, but the funicular that links the two parts is near by. The wonderfully named Museum of Broken Relationships is round the corner.

Details B&B doubles start from £46 (00 385 14 833 877, hotel-jagerhorn.hr)

84 Hotel Adriatic Rovinj, Istria

If you like art, you'll love this boutique hotel in the old town of Rovinj, a former fishing port on a headland where buildings are tightly crowded round a hill and spill down to the seafront. It houses work by 100 local artists, gathered over the hotel's 100-year history. The number 100 is obviously a favourite — the hotel bar also has 100 bottles of whisky to try. The Golden Cape Forest Park is near by, and the hotel offers free bicycles with which to explore the surrounding area.

Details B&B doubles start from £85 (00 385 52 800 250, maistra.com). Fly to Pula

85 Hidden House Stari Grad

Opened as a hotel last year, this 300-year-old boho-chic house is run by Chris Edwardes, a mixologist, and Amanda Blanch, an interior designer, both formerly of Blanch House in Brighton and Ibiza's Hidden Bar. They bought the former fishermen's farmhouse in of the most expensive cities in Europe and hotels close to the main sights such as Red Square can cost a pretty penny. This elegant option is in the Tagansky District, a historic neighbourhood that was once the home of 16th-century coppersmiths. Rooms have elegant furnishings, ornate coving and chandeliers. There's also a restaurant serving traditional Russian cuisine.

Details B&B doubles cost from £96 (booking.com)

87 Hotel Peter I Moscow

In an ornate 19th-century building a few minutes' walk from central sights such as Red Square, the Kremlin and the Bolshoi Theatre, there's an austere feel to this hotel, which feels like a throwback because of the marbled columns, chandeliers and high ceilings. Rooms match some of those period stylings with modern touches, plus there's refined dining, an indoor pool and a well-equipped gym.

Details B&B doubles cost from £99 a night (00 7 495 925 3050, hotel-peter1.ru)

88 Vesta St Petersburg

How this hotel manages to be on the central Nevsky Prospect and remain so cheap is a mystery. Set round a courtyard in a 19th-century building, it's a short walk to key sights such as the Hermitage Museum and the Summer Garden. Rooms are bright and modern, and so underpriced that you may as well upgrade to one of the open-plan apartments that have kitchenettes.

Details B&B doubles cost from £38 (00 7 812 272 1322, vesta-hotel.com)

89 Brody House Budapest

Brody House is the kind of place people use for fashion or film shoots. Spread across four locales in the city centre, it has a members' club, a hotel, a block of shabby-chic apartments and a gallery space called Brody ArtYard. There's always a live set, an exhibition or a performance going on, and chic hotel rooms reflect that ethos. All are named after artists and display their works
